A Brief History of Psychiana

This history is adapted from the extensive finding aid to the "Frank Bruce Robinson Papers, 1929-1951," which was first prepared in 1980 by Judith Nielsen. Physical items in this collection are held by Special Collections & Archives

A Vision of Psychiana

While living in Portland, Oregon in the mid 1920s, Frank Robinson had a "vision of the future," seeing himself at the head of a new religion, one based on I Corinthians 3:16: "Know ye not that your bodies are the temples of God - and that the Spirit of God liveth in you?"

I Talked With God Advertisement

Signed portrait of Frank B. Robinson [02]

Following this experience, Robinson moved to Yakima, Washington where he worked at the Pioneer Drug Store for about two years, but found that the late hours left him little time to develop his teaching. Seeking a location where drug stores closed at 6:00 p.m., he and his family moved to Moscow, Idaho, in April 1928.

It was not long before he began giving evening lectures in the dining room of the Moscow Hotel on the power of the spirit of God; about sixty people attended his first lecture.

Working With Faculty, Staff, and Students

The economic crash of 1929 was the worst crisis in American history, throwing millions out of work and impoverishing families. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt acted quickly to revitalize the country, in part by creating the Civilian Conservation Corps, which became the most popular program of the New Deal. The CCC worked to restore devastated forests, cropland and range, support families and communities, and provide job training and education for three million young men between 1933 to 1942, including 86,000 enrollees in Idaho.

Description

The CCC in Idaho Digital Project invites engagement and interpretation of the history and legacy of the CCC in the rural West through a focus on its impact on the land, participants, and communities in Idaho. The site encourages participation through access to thousands of digitized photographs, oral histories, articles, maps, and documents donated to the project. Use of this collection is further enhanced by guides, digital tools, and

Abstract:	Radiotelemetry has been used by University of Idaho and research partners to study migration and dam passage behavior of adult salmon and steelhead in the Federal Columbia River Power System (FCRPS) since the 1990s. During fifteen return years in the period 1996-2014, more than 26,800 adult salmonids were tagged at Bonneville Dam and monitored as they migrated through the FCRPS and into tributaries. Monitoring varied through time in response to evolving study objectives and there is an extensive series of technical reports and peer-reviewed papers that have summarized annual and multi-year study results. However, there has not been a single-source compilation of the data, methods, and results across the nearly two-decade time series. This document and supporting appendices and databases address four primary objectives: Metadata: Document radiotelemetry metadata, including antenna deployment sites, fish handling and tagging protocols, and telemetry data processing and “Adult Salmon and Steelhead Migration Studies: 1996-2014” is an early stand alone collection built from metadata and PDFs submitted by an ecology lab to preserve research for long term open access.
