Welcome to the Library! We are busier than ever; during the fall term we had over 25,000 visitors per week. Why is the Library so popular? Millar Library is a great place to work and relax. There are 29 student group study rooms where you can work on projects with friends, and a student practice presentation room where you can get ready for that all-important class presentation. Check out the Learning and Research Center (2nd fl) because the Library has the most comfortable computing area on campus, provides wireless access throughout the building, and the librarians are there to answer your questions and help with your research. The Library's resources are also popular, whether print collections like the Dark Horse Comics archive, or online resources such as ARTstor, a database with nearly one million images in the areas of art, architecture, the humanities, and social sciences. The recently upgraded Summit regional catalog, with over 9 million titles that you can check out, is one of our most popular services. The Library isn't just about resources and computers; it is a center for learning on campus. In collaboration with the Writing Center, Undergraduate Advising and Support Center (UASC), and the Skills Enhancement and Tutoring Center (SETC), the Library is now hosting a broad array of academic support services, including writing help, academic advising and math tutoring. Our librarians and staff are here to help you succeed. This is your Library, your place to work and your place to relax.

UNIVERSITY

LIBQUAL 2008 SURVEY QUOTES

I've been using the reference desk a lot, and they are always very quick and knowledgeable.

--Undergraduate Student

I could not begin to achieve the necessary requirements I have for both school and work without the amazing resources of the PSU library.

--Graduate Student

This is the best university library I have ever had access to in terms of service. Librarians have always been helpful to me in my research and the classroom.

--Faculty

Relevant Resources for Engaged Learning

Helen H. Spalding, University Librarian

What exciting new leaders we have in the new year! President Wim Wiewel is providing positive energy and direction for the future at Portland State, and President-elect Obama's inauguration is an historic event on many levels. Both depend on your informed input and participation.

The Portland State Library is a rich resource of information for you to mine as you explore topics in your classes, your research, your work and your personal life. What attracted many of us to Portland State is its intention to provide students and faculty with relevant research experiences, engaged with the community and often informing public decisions with local and global impact. As they develop public policy, local, state, and federal officials are influenced by those who elected them and those whom they serve. An educated, participating citizenry is the cornerstone of a strong democracy and keeps our officials accountable for their decisions on our behalf.

Now is a good time to remind yourselves of the valuable information generated by government agencies that is available in print or online in the Millar Library. There is not a subject you may be studying that does not have relevant, in-depth material produced by governmental units or funded by federal grants. Do you want to know more about landslides, or tips to save household energy, or what the decision making process is for state funding of higher education? What about the results of successful fine arts programs that received government support, or regulations being considered for the banking industry?

Make the most of your opportunities at Portland State by exploring the diverse resources in your Library, including government documents!

FedStats allows you to search over one hundred federal agencies that “provide data and trend information on such topics as economic and population trends, crime, education, health care, aviation safety, energy use, farm production and more.” Agencies include the Census Bureau, Department of Veterans Affairs, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. You can use the MapStats link to get a statistical profile of Oregon overall and then drill down to the county and city level.

Government Information: What You Need to Know!

Government information is vital to the success of students and faculty at Portland State University. The largest publisher in the world, the U.S. Government Printing Office (GPO) distributes information on almost all conceivable topics. You will want to check government publications whenever you do your research for it not only includes bills, laws, legislation, census data, maps, atlases, patents & trademarks, profiles of nations, climatic conditions, but also recipes, how to start a business, building a home, and much more.

Reports and studies on current topics are produced by federal agencies and the U.S. Congress. 200+ years of Congressional hearings provide information and perspective on important issues of the day as well as insight on the historical eras of the nation.

Detailed population, social and economic data are available from the U.S. Census Bureau. You can discover information on the characteristics of citizens living in specific blocks, census tracts, counties, or states. Key demographic patterns and trends can be obtained from U.S. Census data and reports.

Government documents are shelved on the 4th floor of the Library and, increasingly, are also available electronically.

For assistance, go to the Reference Desk on the 2nd floor, or contact Don Frank, Coordinator of Government Information, at frankd@pdx.edu or 503.725.4709.

Visit The Research Guide for Government Information .

On the 2nd floor in the Library Research Center (Reference) for the Winter Term, you can use the following services:

- Writing Center: Mondays through Fridays, 9:00 am - 1:00 pm (right-hand consultation station). As with last term, it may take a week or so for them to fill all the shifts;
- Advising: Wednesdays 5:00 pm – 8:00 pm (center consultation station);
- Math tutoring: Mondays 4:30 pm to 7:00 pm; Tuesdays 4:30 – 7:00 pm (right-hand consultation station).

WEB-SITEINGS –INAUGURATION 2009

The Office of the President-Elect

View President-Elect Obama’s plans for “Revitalizing the Economy,” “Ending the War in Iraq,” and “Renewing American Global Leadership.” Barack Obama’s agenda also details issues such as Education, Energy & Environment, and Foreign Policy. You can read the latest press releases and blog entries from his team and learn more about the President-Elect and Vice President-Elect and their families. As the inauguration approaches, this site continues to expand and eventually will include profiles of the people appointed as members of the Cabinet and White House staff.

U.S. Government Accountability Office – 2009 Congressional and Presidential Transition

The GAO is a resource for our new leaders. Created in 1921, the GAO is an “independent, non-partisan agency that works for Congress.” This site highlights urgent issues for the nation and the challenges facing each federal agency as Washington, D.C. gets ready for the transition. There are key reports (some published, some in the next few months) and research available on each topic and the GAO also offers a long-term look at the United States’ fiscal stability.

Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies

In addition to a calendar of events for this historic day, you can find details about each inaugural ceremony, starting with George Washington in 1789. When did the Marine Band start playing at the Inauguration? In 1801 at the first swearing-in of Thomas Jefferson. The site shares interesting details for each of the traditional inaugural day activities, from the morning worship service through to the inaugural ball and includes images from the U.S. Senate’s collection. (For helpful information about transportation and city closures see Washington, D.C.’s site - <http://www.inauguration.dc.gov/index.asp>).

THOMAS - Legislative information from the Library of Congress

THOMAS was unveiled in 1995 and offers federal legislative information to the public for free. You can search bills and resolutions by keyword, sponsor name or topic, review the latest activity in Congress (including roll call votes and calendars), search the Congressional Record and committee reports. Links to additional government resources about the House, Senate and U.S. Congress are provided.

Happier...Healthier...Wealthier!

Having recently joined the staff at Portland State University, I am constantly amazed by the passion, commitment, and integrity of our students, faculty, staff, and friends. Everywhere I go, people are enthusiastic about Portland State University. I am particularly proud to work at the heart and soul of the campus – the Portland State Library. Did you know that the Library serves nearly one million visitors each year? Wow!

In the fall 2008 Library Newsletter, University Librarian Helen Spalding shared with you how some of our new donations support student success. We are excited about these important gifts and the vital role they are playing in the Library and the community. However, as the Library's new fundraiser, I would be remiss if I did not tell you that your support is important now more than ever.

The good news is that giving can make you happier, healthier...and wealthier! According to a study, "Why Giving Matters", by Arthur C. Brooks, professor of public administration and director of nonprofit studies program at Syracuse University's Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, charitable giving is positively linked with income. He determined that for every dollar given, you will receive $3.75 back in the future. This means that your gift to the Portland State Library will not only advance the academic success of PSU students and faculty, it may just be the smartest investment of your life!
