Elevate Student Success. That’s how PSU’s recent strategic plan describes our goal. At the Library, the focus on student success takes on multiple forms. For example, PSU Library faculty and staff constantly teach library instructional classes and workshops and help students one-on-one in using library services and collections to help them succeed. One article in this newsletter highlights the ways University Archivist and Head of Special Collections Cris Paschild supported Honors student Corinne Rupp in developing a unique senior thesis project.

Another newsletter article describes how our PDXScholar service provides ways for students to make the results of their student research available to others worldwide. This may mean publishing the results of their research as a journal article in the PSU McNair Scholar’s Journal, as a thesis or dissertation, or as a paper or poster session included in the PSU Student Symposium conference proceedings. PDXScholar provides a powerful way for students’ work to impact others and enhance the learning experience for PSU students.

A few additional examples of how the Library has helped our students succeed over the last academic year:
• Held periodic “listening sessions” with our students to find out what we can do to better help them
• Added access to over 1200 additional online journals
• Borrowed needed books we didn’t already own from other libraries
• Provided access to desktop and laptop computers for our students
• Made additional copies of textbooks available to students on Library reserves
• Opened the Library 24 hours per day during finals and the end-of-term periods
• Created online tutorials and guides for student use in their classes
• Supported our students who are parents (see the great photos on the next page!)

Congratulations from the Library to our successful PSU graduating students!

Sincerely,
On Friday, April 8, more than 280 kids came to campus with their parents, who are students, staff, and faculty at PSU. The Library hosted an afternoon event featuring healthy snacks, coloring, button-making, books from the Library’s collection of award-winning children’s literature, and, the biggest hit, drawing on whiteboards!

About 35 kids and their parents stopped by the Library. This annual event coincides with Portland Public Schools’ teacher work day and is hosted by the PSU Resource Center for Students with Children.

Some of our visitors shared their delightful artwork with us.

We had a wide range of books available for families to read, including Star Wars comics from the Library’s Dark Horse Comics Collection.

The whiteboards in the library classroom were very popular, especially with our littlest visitors.

Kids and their parents enjoyed new boxes of crayons and the coloring pages we made just for this event.

Librarian Joan Petit’s son Solomon was thrilled to discover Star Wars graphic novels.
Curated by PSU Honors College student Corinne Rupp, the Special Collections spring exhibit features Portland politician and activist Gretchen Kafoury (1942-2015). The exhibit, which draws on materials from Kafoury’s papers, connects the passion she brought to the causes she fought for to each role she played in Oregon politics, whether organizing local actions or holding elected office.

Highlights include Kafoury’s activism in the women’s rights movement in Portland and in state government; her efforts locally as County and City Commissioner to establish and support social programs for those in need, particularly women and the homeless; and the part she played in legislating equal rights in Oregon. The exhibit offers an inside look into the workings of both official and unofficial politics through Kafoury’s unflagging dedication, principles, and humor.

"The Personal is Political: Civic Life, Legislation, and Commitment to Social Justice" will be on view in the Library’s first floor elevator lobby through July.

Portland State senior Corinne Rupp has been interning in University Archives and Special Collections as part of her Honors College thesis, supervised by University Archivist Cris Paschild. Her project included processing part of the Gretchen Kafoury Papers and installing our current exhibit.

Corinne said, “It has truly been an amazing experience; I feel like I have an intimate knowledge of Gretchen now from working with her documents for so long. She had such an amazing joy for life that really comes out in the things she saved and the writings we have.”

We’ve been delighted to have Corinne working with us at the Library. And we’re delighted to share that her other internship, at the Museum of the Oregon Territory in Oregon City, has lead to a post-graduation job as Director of Programs. Congratulations, Corinne!
On Thursday, January 21, 2016, PDXScholar achieved a remarkable milestone: one million downloads. Several works were downloaded that day—master’s theses and dissertations, an undergraduate honors thesis, photographs from University Archives and Special Collections, publications from PSU research centers and institutes, and faculty articles and papers—and they represent well the breadth of material in PDXScholar.

This map shows that students and researchers all over the world are downloading materials from PDXScholar.

PDXScholar is the university’s centralized platform for PSU journals, conference proceedings, exemplary student research, faculty scholarship, and more. Managed by PSU Library, PDXScholar includes more than 12,000 items. Because items in PDXScholar are discoverable through Google and other search engines, the repository has international reach.

A local resident told us, “I’m a Portland community member and happen to be PSU alumni. Papers are often available for those who are in school or in research, but as an average citizen it is harder to see them. Having access to grad papers is fantastic.”

And a student in Vietnam said, “Thanks Portland State University for letting me get free access to such a useful resource like this.”

As of May, we’ve reached 1.2 million downloads! Where will we be at the end of the year? Stay tuned!
40th Anniversary of Women’s Studies at PSU

Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies (WGSS) at Portland State University originated in the late 1960s with the work of students, faculty, and community volunteers. Classes began in the early 1970s, with a formal certificate program in Women’s Studies approved in 1976. After surviving budget cuts in the 1980s, the program grew in the 1990s, when the undergraduate major and minor were approved. In 2010, Women’s Studies at PSU became Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies, and was also approved to become an academic department.

Using materials from University Archives, PSU Library Special Collections staff and WGSS alumna Rhiannon Cates curated the Library’s winter exhibit. Ever Forward: Forty Years of Women, Gender and Sexuality Studies at Portland State University highlighted the passion and energy of the students and faculty dedicated to the foundation, survival, and growth of feminist and queer scholarship at Portland State.
